About this course

The Classics and Ancient History MA explores the literature, cultures, history and societies of ancient Greece and Rome and their later reception, whilst delivering transferable skills and training that employers value.

Introduction

The programme's modules help you to develop thematic perspectives on the ancient world and understand ideas that inform contemporary research. They build your skills in research and communication, encouraging you to adopt strategies for gathering and organising information, analysing complex evidence, evaluating propositions and articulating arguments for different audiences. As well as pursuing independent research, you will work with fellow students to coordinate and participate in a research colloquium.

You will choose from optional modules focused around the literary, documentary, visual and material culture of ancient Greece and Rome. These modules shed light on the lived experiences of people in Classical antiquity.

Additional options in Classical and Near Eastern Archaeology allow you to expand beyond Greece and Rome to the Mediterranean and the Near East, and to work with objects in our Garstang Museum collection. You can develop skills in ancient Greek or Latin language. You may also apply to study abroad at the British School of Athens or the British School of Rome as an accredited part of your degree.

This variety allows you to tailor the MA to suit your interests, and prepares you for completing a dissertation on the agreed topic of your choice.

Who is this course for?

The programme is designed for graduates in Classics, Classical Studies, Classical Civilisation, Ancient History and other relevant disciplines who wish to broaden and deepen their understanding of the Classical Greco-Roman world and its legacy.

What you'll learn

- To demonstrate understanding of the literature and culture of the Greeks and Romans and of the historical experience of antiquity in its diversity and communicate that understanding in writing and orally
- Knowledge of topics in Classics and Ancient History and how to deploy that knowledge in the evaluation and production of arguments
- To identify and resolve problems relating to the literature, culture, and history of ancient Greece and Rome, utilizing linguistic, conceptual and theoretical approaches
- To become familiar with a diverse range of written texts, visual images and material remains from the ancient world; to understand their characteristics and problems and be able to undertake advanced analysis as a result
- To be conscious of research methodologies and be self-reflective in their application when formulating and testing hypotheses, analysing and evaluating information, and making reasoned synthesis of diverse and sometimes incomplete material
- To learn and work independently by planning, conducting and reporting on an extended programme of original research and by responding constructively to feedback.

Teaching and assessment

How you'll learn

The majority of teaching is delivered in seminar format with fellow students, combined with one to one session support from your dissertation supervisor.

Within the core module 'Research Event' (CLAH854) you will work together with fellow students to articulate a research question and pursue it through organizing, participating in and reflecting on a research event, or colloquium. Independent study is carried out alongside this via producing a written portfolio. This work enables you to strengthen your research skills and topic-specific knowledge, whilst building key employability skills associated with team work and developing practice-based understanding of event organization.

Optional modules in Classical and Near Eastern Archaeology offer sessions in handling and evaluating archaeological remains.

In years when they are running, full-time students may apply to attend a residential postgraduate course at the British Schools of Athens (CLAH898) or Rome (CLAH899). Places on the courses are awarded by the schools on academic merit. Successful applicants receive practical skills training and develop knowledge and understanding of an aspect of ancient Greece or Rome, and benefit from the expertise, resources and facilities available at an international institute for advanced research.

Optional ancient Greek or Latin language modules involve frequent contact sessions (two or three per week). The different language modules available cater for different levels of prior knowledge, therefore those at complete beginner to advanced levels will be supported in language learning.

You are continually supported in your dissertation work by a dissertation supervisor, who will discuss progress and offer feedback on draft writing.

How you're assessed

Assessments are fundamentally research-based; they require students to identify and marshal resources, evaluate and analyse evidence from critically informed perspectives, and to develop robust arguments. This is achieved through a varied portfolio of assessment activities depending on the module.

The optional modules: 'Truth and Lies' (CLAH851), 'Spaces and Places' (CLAH853), 'The Body' (CLAH852) and 'Praise and Blame' (CLAH858) require you to complete a 5,000 word essay on a research project. This assessment assists in building towards the longer 15–20,000 word required Dissertation. Optional modules in Classical and Near Eastern Archaeology involve similar essay assessments, plus other assessment tasks such as archaeological reports and catalogues.

Optional ancient languages modules involve unseen exams (with a dictionary) to assess linguistic competence and comprehension. From intermediate language level onwards, these are balanced with critical exercises and commentaries to assess interpretation and translation, which include a research component. The language modules are the only modules on the course to assess via exam.

Required modules in Research Skills and Methodologies introduce a range of other activities through which research can be presented and reflected upon in other formats, including blogs, journals, posters, and oral presentations. These varied assessments engage you with the techniques of research appropriate to your subject specialisms whilst familiarising you with different communication strategies and technologies. Through the diverse assessment approach of the programme you are therefore provided with preparation for further research and enhanced employability.

Liverpool Hallmarks

We have a distinctive approach to education, the Liverpool Curriculum Framework, which focuses on research-connected teaching, active learning, and authentic assessment to ensure our students graduate as digitally fluent and confident global citizens.

The Liverpool Curriculum framework sets out our distinctive approach to education. Our teaching staff support our students to develop academic knowledge, skills, and understanding alongside our graduate attributes:

- Digital fluency
- Confidence
- Global citizenship

Our curriculum is characterised by the three Liverpool Hallmarks:

- Research-connected teaching

Careers and employability

The programme provides academic training for those seeking a career in the HE sector. It also forms a good background for careers elsewhere in education and in the heritage industry. Graduates will have enhanced skills suitable to a wide range of employment, especially where communication, critical thinking and research are key components of the role. The required module 'Research Event' (CLAH854) fosters skills such as event organization, teamwork, leadership and management, which will be transferrable to many future work environments.

With the Classics and Ancient History MA you are well equipped for a wide variety of jobs in sectors such as:

- Higher Education
- Heritage industry
- Museums
- Archives management
- Travel and tourism
- Teaching
- Journalism
- Civil service
- Finance
- Marketing.

Pre-sessional English

Do you need to complete a Pre-sessional English course to meet the English language requirements for this course?

The length of Pre-sessional English course you'll need to take depends on your current level of English language ability.

Pre-sessional English in detail

If you don't meet our English language requirements, we can use your most recent IELTS score, or the equivalent score in selected other English language tests, to determine the length of Pre-sessional English course you require.

Use the table below to check the course length you're likely to require for your current English language ability and see whether the course is available on campus or online.

Your most recent IELTS score	Pre-sessional English course length	On campus or online
6.0 overall, with no component below 6.0	6 weeks	On campus
6.0 overall, with no component below 5.5	10 weeks	On campus and online options available
6.0 overall, with no more than one component below 5.5, and no component below 5.0	12 weeks	On campus and online options available
5.5 overall, with no more than one component below 5.5, and no component below 5.0	20 weeks	On campus
5.0 overall, with no more than one component below 5.0, and no component below 4.5	30 weeks	On campus
4.5 overall, with no more than one component below 4.5, and no	40 weeks	On campus

Your most recent IELTS score	Pre-sessional English course length	On campus or online
