About this course

Study the Greeks and Romans and the languages in which they thought and wrote, whether you are a beginner or already studying Greek or Latin. In the language modules, your language skills and literary awareness will be developed through a wide range of texts (in poetry and prose) from the Graeco-Roman world.

Introduction

The degree allows you to study the society and culture of antiquity, including its literature, art, history and archaeology. If you have no previous experience of either Greek or Latin, the introductory level modules are designed to move you towards reading texts in their original languages as swiftly as possible. The more advanced modules allow for in-depth study of a wide variety of authors. You will have the advantage of expert tuition, often in very small groups, and the opportunity to develop specialist interests. Classics students also acquire the critical skills necessary for the interpretation of written evidence, to understand methodological issues and contemporary theories relevant to the study of ancient languages and societies.

What you'll learn

- Ability to read and analyse ancient texts in their original language

- A systematic understanding of the literature of the Greek and Roman worlds, and through it, aspects of society, politics and history
- Development of critical skills required in the interpretation of a range of literary and documentary evidence in studying the Graeco-Roman worlds
- A grounding in a wide range of critical theories, concepts and perspectives currently in use across the humanities
- Development of linguistic competence in Ancient Greek and Latin languages
- Opportunity to undertake a work placement

Course content

Discover what you'll learn, what you'll study, and how you'll be taught and assessed.

Year one

In year one you will study Greek and Latin language at levels depending on your previous experience. Other modules are on Greek and Roman literature in translation (the cultural cornerstones of the Odyssey and the Aeneid), ancient history, and visual culture.

Students are required to take both Latin and Ancient Greek language modules.

The choice of Latin or Ancient Greek language modules is dependent on the level of ability. As a general rule, beginners join CLAH401/2 and CLAH501/2; students with an AS join CLAH403/4 and CLAH503/4; and those with an A level join CLAH405/6 and CLAH505/6. Students with other qualifications must seek guidance from the subject lead on the appropriate entry point for their studies.

Language modules must be taken in pairs across the session.

Students also take 30 credits of optional modules in each semester.

ALGY109 and ALGY116 are pre-requisite modules for Egyptology modules in years two and three.

CLAH105 is a prerequisite for CLAH268 in Year 2.

Year three

In year three, your dissertation will give you the opportunity to undertake detailed and independent research under the guidance of an expert adviser. The subject matter itself will be your own choice. You will also continue with Greek and Latin and will read key authors in the original language. The optional modules on offer draw directly on the areas of particular expertise of the Liverpool teaching staff.

Students take 15 credits of Latin modules and 15 credits of Ancient Greek modules in each semester. Language modules must be taken in pairs across the session and will normally continue from those taken in year two.

Students also take 15 credits of optional modules in each semester and a required dissertation (CLAH450). Students must ensure they meet any prerequisites.

Students wishing to take CLAH310 must have taken either CLAH105, ALGY109 or ALGY131 in year three. Students cannot register directly for this module.

Students wishing to take ALGY342 must have taken ALGY106 in year one.

CLAH450 is a 'year-long' module which represents 15 credits in each semester.

Students may take 15 credits of optional cognate modules outside of their degree programme with permission from the subject lead.

Students may only take ALGY213, ALGY288 or ALGY386 in their final year if they have not taken them before.

Combined degree

Choosing this subject as a combined degree

There are five levels for each language in this programme, and you are slotted in at the appropriate level for your language experience. It may be that you will do Greek I at the same time as Latin III if you have an A level in Latin and not in Greek.

Teaching and assessment

How you'll learn

Modules are delivered by a mixture of lectures and seminars in year one, in year two the lecture element within modules is complemented by student led seminars. Finally, in year three, most modules are delivered by a short series of lectures with a focus on student-led seminars thereafter.

Self-directed study is also expected through the course reading list and conducting research for your essays and projects. Academic staff are regularly available via their office hours for one-to-one feedback and support. Course material is available 24-hours a day on Canvas, our online learning platform, and study support is available from our dedicated student services team.

Lectures combine the delivery of information and themes with discussion and demonstration of method and analysis, to address core topics and questions. These are lecturer-led, and may involve class discussion and group work.

Seminars are small class discussion groups at which students have an opportunity to explore evidence and scholarship to answer questions, building on independent research or other relevant preparation. In seminars, the teachers act as a facilitator and guide, co-ordinating, guiding, and reacting to student contributions.

Language classes follow a seminar format. Seminars may include oral presentations by individuals or groups of students.

Independent study: students support and prepare for their in-class learning by undertaking independent study. This normally involves reviewing lecture content, follow-up reading of sources and scholarship relating to lecture topics, preparing answers to questions set for seminar discussion through prior reading of sources and scholarship.

How you're assessed

Classics is assessed in a variety of ways.

Examination: learning outcomes are demonstrated in student performance through preparation for and the sitting of an examination. Such examinations may cover essay-based work (usually by selection of a set number of questions), source analysis (usually by selection of questions or a commentary on an ancient source) or language work (mostly translation and commentary of set passages).

Assessed coursework, including essays, commentaries, posters, and projects: learning outcomes are demonstrated in student performance through the preparation and delivery of a piece of work as an act of self-directed learning with full access to all the relevant learning and research tools and supports.

Seminar portfolio: a critical summary of seminars presented by students reflecting on the material discussed in seminars and subsequently researched and presented as a discussion of the topic or theme.

Class tests, primarily in language modules: learning outcomes are demonstrated with regards to understanding, analysing and applying structures and concepts of grammar and syntax.

Oral presentations: modules summatively (and formatively) assess presentation skills and in several modules require the use of Microsoft PowerPoint.
