About this course

Join a programme that places you at the forefront of investigations into the histories, legacies and commemorations of human enslavement and unfree labour. This MA combines historical perspectives with global insights into modern manifestations of slavery, forced labour and human trafficking.

Introduction

Exploring the history of unfree labour and examining modern slavery, this MA reflects a growing interest in the histories and afterlives of transatlantic slavery.

The programme connects the local and the global. We'll reflect, for example, on Liverpool's role as the former 'capital of the slave trade' and review slave and unfree labour across different time periods and geographical locations.

We'll challenge you to analyse historical forms of slavery and critique modern responses to human trafficking. Evaluating the legacies of slavery in contemporary society, you'll apply critical and literary theories to different representations of slavery. Links with resistance, protest and activism will also be considered.

You'll benefit from our unique relationship with the International Slavery Museum in Liverpool. Working with the Museum's staff, you'll study the commemoration and memorialisation of slavery. An optional project-based placement provides further opportunity to gain practical experience with a museum, archive or charity.

Membership of the University's Centre for the Study of International Slavery will enable you to access a variety of seminars and conferences. You'll meet international speakers at these events, attend talks and discuss cutting-edge research into historical and contemporary manifestations of slavery.

What you'll learn

- Advanced knowledge and understanding of slavery and unfree labour, both historically and in the modern world
- Key methodologies and practices in international slavery research
- A range of chronological, geographical and cultural contexts for enslavement, forced labour and human trafficking
- The histories and afterlives of transatlantic slavery, including the role of the city of Liverpool
- The challenges of modern slavery as a subject of academic study
- Connections between slavery and activism, resistance and protest, as well as migration and human rights
- How slavery is represented in films, images, novels and other media
- Record-keeping structures, traditions and practices around the world
- How to think independently, critically and creatively when working with complex material.

Teaching and assessment

How you'll learn

Teaching takes place in small-group seminars and workshops, as well as one-to-one tutorials. The emphasis is on collaboration between students and staff.

External partners contribute directly to the programme and the MA offers extracurricular opportunities to engage with slavery and unfree labour in different contexts. This includes an optional project-based work placement where you would typically spend one day a week in a relevant public history, policy-focused or practice-based institution. This could be a museum, archive or charity.

How you're assessed

You'll be assessed through a series of research-based activities that will encourage you to reflect on the place of slavery and unfree labour in a range of historical and contemporary contexts.

This includes a combination of essays, case studies, presentations, self-reflective journal, policy paper and heritage brief, as well as a dissertation.

Liverpool Hallmarks

Careers and employability

Developing your skills in communication, collaborative working, critical thinking and research are key features of the programme.

We'll immerse you in public-facing thinking and activity on a regional, national and international basis. You'll graduate able to demonstrate organisational skills, teamwork, time management, personal initiative and responsibility to potential employers.

After graduating, engaging with the Centre for the Study of International Slavery's external partners, across the Liverpool and Merseyside region and beyond, could provide opportunities for you to collaborate on original research that provides new insights.

This MA delivers ideal training if you are seeking an academic career in the field of slavery and unfree labour. It also provides a solid foundation for broader careers in education, the cultural sector and third sector industries.

Potential opportunities include:

- Research positions, for example in central or local government, journalism, police, leisure and heritage, business, public affairs, and politics.
- Public education and custodianship, for example museums, schools and galleries.
- Consultancies and activist positions, for example in national and international governmental and non-governmental organisations, charities, and community-based and grassroots organisations focused on slavery, human trafficking, and human rights. This includes Anti-Slavery International and various bodies of the United Nations.

You may also decide to continue your studies to PhD level. Your research could focus on the study of slavery, dependence and subordination, or explore particular historical, political and social dimensions of these subjects.

Entry requirements

The qualifications and exam results you'll need to apply for this course.

Postgraduate entry requirements

We accept a 2:2 honours degree from a UK university, or an equivalent academic qualification from a similar non-UK institution. This degree should be in History (or a closely related subject).

A personal statement, which clearly demonstrates an interest in the programme and an understanding of its context, is also required.

An interview may form part of the selection process. If you're invited to interview, you'll be requested to submit a sample of your historical analysis, between 1,500 and 2,500 words in English, for discussion. Please note, being invited to interview does not guarantee the offer of a place.

International qualifications

Select your country or region to view specific entry requirements.

If you hold a bachelor's degree or equivalent, but don't meet the entry requirements for a master's degree at Liverpool, a pre-master's, delivered by our partner, University of Liverpool International College, can help you gain a place.

Although there's no direct pre-master's route to this MA, completing a pre-master's pathway can guarantee you a place on many other postgraduate courses which may interest you.
