6. OUTCOMES OF STRATEGIC REVIEW GREEN PAPER CONSULTATION

The Senate received a presentation by the Vice-Chancellor on Ipsos MORI's analysis of the responses received during the Strategic Review Green Paper consultation exercise¹.

(I) Reported:

a) That it should be noted that individual and collective feedback on the fourteen consultation questions had been given equal status at this point pending further analysis.

b) That the key findings could be summarised as:

- Improving communication was essential - both internally and externally.
- The profile of the University needed to be raised.
- More international collaborations should be created.
- The University must focus on its strengths.
- Engagement with employers and business should be from both a research and student experience perspective.

c) In response to some of the feedback provided during the exercise, that:

- Where decisions had been taken and who was accountable for them would be more transparent in future.
A set of measures/performance indicators/targets that were accessible and clear would be formulated.

As a membership organisation there should be no ‘us’ and ‘them’.

The planning process would be more joined up in future and decisions reached by mutual agreement.

Crucial to success were: continuous improvement; learning from each other; collaboration and partnership; alumni engagement; CPD and the tackling of underperformance; engagement with third sector organisations, as well as employers and businesses, and civic engagement; and the interconnectivity of the three supporting strategies (Research and Impact, Education and Professional Services) in relation to the student experience.

A meaningful articulation of what it means to teach in a research intensive environment was being developed.

There was a need to ensure that the promise to students in terms of their employability was fulfilled.

Work was underway to enhance the opportunities for student evaluation and to provide students with information on what they receive in return for their fees.

(II) Agreed:

a) That the key findings were unsurprising.

b) That some of the responses that had been analysed as being secondary themes and second tier themes would also be crucial in shaping the White Paper.

c) That the presentation should be circulated to members.

7. PROFESSORIAL LEVELS

The Senate received a paper setting out proposals to put in place a more systematic approach to pay for professorial roles.

(I) Reported:

a) That these proposals had been in development since 2011, and responded to Remuneration Committee’s request that the University address equal pay considerations and develop an improved system of governance around pay levels as a consequence of the Royal Holloway equal pay challenge by a female professor, and in consideration of survey data which showed that other universities had salary levels arrangements in place.

b) That implementation of the proposals would reduce the risks that could arise in the absence of a systematic method for testing internal and external relativities and of sound processes/criteria for managing professorial pay.

c) That the proposals included a set of statements intended to describe four different levels of contribution. These incorporated indicators for generic, research, teaching, practice and leadership activities. Based on assessment against these criteria, professors would be allocated to one of four bands, with pay linked to banding. Where an individual was allocated to a band with lower pay than their current salary, there would be a period of pay protection to allow them to develop their contribution.

d) That EPVCs and Heads of School/Institute would assimilate each individual’s contribution against the five criteria headings, using data that was already held, to come to an overall assessment of their banding which would then be reviewed by individuals. The Standing Committee for Personal Chairs would review and approve the banding distributions, and consider submissions for alternative bandings.

e) That the expectation was that the process would be operational by the start of the next academic session.

(II) Agreed:

a) That the proposals be endorsed, with members commending the consistency, equity and fairness that would be introduced provided that a thorough and transparent process was implemented.

b) That the suggestions made should be taken forward during the implementation phase, including in relation to the following:
clarification of the guidance to confirm that, although contribution would be expected across the criteria headings, it was acknowledged that individuals were likely to have a main domain(s);
• implications around clinical professors;
• establishing whether the constitution of the Standing Committee for Personal Chairs remains appropriate; and
• consideration of scale points within the four bands.
