

The effect of visualisation on L2 learners' recall of texts and the impact it has on subsequent learning. MATSDA University of Liverpool 28th June 2014

Mr Eugene Foster, who was nearly 70 years old, lived with his wife in a large, six storey house in New York, on the lower East side. They had four decrepit but loyal servants. It was a particularly gloomy place, and few people ever came to visit them. But on this particular, blustery morning in January, the house came alive and there was a great deal of bustling about. One maid carried bundles of dust sheets to every room, while another draped them over the antique furniture. The butler brought down suitcases and put them in the hall. The cook kept popping out of the kitchen for a quick word with the butler, and Mrs Foster herself, stern looking in an old-fashioned ermine fur coat with a black fleece hat on her head flew from room to room to supervise the feverish operations. Actually, she had thought of nothing else since they had decided to move, and now all she thought of was that she was going to miss her plane if her husband didn't come out of his room and get ready.
