

29th May, 2020

INSTITUTE NEWS

Institute of Population Health Bulletin

Welcome to the latest edition of the IPH weekly bulletin. We hope that you're finding these updates helpful and starting next Monday, we will also launch a separate weekly update highlighting upcoming events and research opportunities.

Blogs from institute colleagues

ITV REPORT 21 May 2020 at 3:52pm

Lockdown lecturer reaches new audience through the internet

A photograph of Dr Pete Bridge, a lecturer from Liverpool University, in his home office. He is wearing a blue t-shirt and a patterned headband, looking towards the camera with a slight smile. He is sitting at a wooden desk with a laptop open in front of him. To his left is a green chalkboard with some writing on it. In the foreground, there is a potted basil plant in a silver metal pot. The background shows a window with brown curtains and a blue teapot on a table.

Learning at home with Dr Pete Bridge from Liverpool University

Outreach update: ITV interview with Dr Pete Bridge

Since the lock down commenced, one of the institute's radiotherapy lecturers, Dr Pete Bridge in the School of Health Sciences, has been delivering regular science based, interactive online lectures for primary school children. This started in response to queries from his young nephews and nieces and then was shared across SHS for those staff who had children of this age.

As happens with these things, this has snowballed somewhat, mainly because word of mouth is so powerful, and was picked up by ITV Granada reports who sent reporter Jennifer Buck to attend one of his lessons:

<https://www.itv.com/news/granada/2020-05-21/lockdown-lecturer-reaches-new-audience-through-the-internet/>

Why not follow us on Twitter as well - @livuniiph