Learn how to use evidence to inform your practice: new workshops

We are pleased to introduce a new programme that will support you to use evidence to develop your practice, service and research. This builds on the success of our pilot – Evidence for Change.

This professional development programme is relevant to people working in healthcare, public health, social care and other services. It is also relevant to people in the early stages of a research project. Research experience is not necessary.

The workshops:
- 5th October  Developing research questions
- 2nd November  Identifying evidence (including database searching skills)
- 7th December  Critically appraising evidence and reporting findings

Between the day-long workshops, you will have use of the University of Liverpool Library and will be supported by our academic team to begin a brief evidence review on a topic relevant to your interests. Workshops include expert tutorials on evidence review methods and facilitated practical work.

Venue, fee and registration:
The venues are close to the University of Liverpool. Fees are £375 per person for the programme, including University enrolment and academic support.

- To encourage teams, we offer discounted rates of £300/person for teams of 2, £250/person for teams of 3 or more.
- A limited number of places for eligible research students will be offered at a further discount. Please contact us to apply.
