

Be part of the 14th International Seabird Group Conference

Liverpool, 3rd-6th September 2018

The Conference

The next International Seabird Group Conference promises an exciting showcase of the latest seabird research, located within the heart of the city of Liverpool, famous for its maritime history and cultural diversity.

The Seabird Group

The Seabird Group was founded in 1966 to promote and help coordinate the study and conservation of seabirds. The group has a rich history of seabird census work, and continues to provide support to projects across the globe.

Benefits for you

- Europe's largest meeting of seabird scientists: over 200 delegates from the UK & abroad
- Connect with researchers striving for the cutting edge of technology & analysis
- Build your network where the latest research questions are being discussed
- Start a dialogue with applied scientists and fellow sponsors from a range of industry sectors
- Raise your profile during the busy social schedule and online: seabird scientists are some of the most active on social media and this conference will be no exception!
