

Human Rights in the UK Media: Representation and Reality

FRIDAY 19 SEPTEMBER 2014

Price: £25—Full Delegate rate, £15—Student or Unwaged rate

Hosted by the School of Law and Social Justice, part funded by The Modern Law Review

Join us at the University of Liverpool for a one day innovative seminar exploring the role of the media in contentious contemporary debates about human rights.

Human rights is a hot topic in the UK today. This seminar brings together constitutional and international law researchers, media and communications researchers, journalists, legal practitioners and civil society actors for an interdisciplinary discussion on the media's representation of rights. Does the media understand rights? Are some rights more contested than others? Does the ECHR have a future in the UK?

Has the media turned against rights?

Speakers include:

David Mead, School of Law,
University of East Anglia

Owen Bowcott, The Guardian

Aoife Daly, School of Law, University of Essex

Susana Dias, School of Journalism, Media and Communication Studies, Cardiff University

Eleanor Drywood, Law, University of Liverpool

Lieve Gies, Media and Communications, University of Leicester

Mike Gordon, Law, University of Liverpool

Eric Heinze, School of Law,
Queen Mary, University of London

Michael Kearney, Law, University of Sussex

Nuala Mole, The AIRE Centre

Colin Murray, Newcastle Law School

Colm O Cinneide, UCL Faculty of Laws

Jake Rowbottom, Faculty of Law, University of Oxford

Adam Wagner, One Crown Office Row; UK Human Rights Blog

To register visit: <http://www.liv.ac.uk/law-and-social-justice/conferences/humanrights/>