We want our students to be highly employable global citizens. With that in mind, students in the Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences are able to study a language as a named part of their degree. In addition to studying a language (or languages) as part of a joint 50/50 programme (see the grid on pages 6-7 for available combinations), you can study a language as 25% of your degree through our Languages at Liverpool programme. This language will be listed on your degree certificate alongside another subject which will comprise 75% of your studies. The grid below indicates the subjects available to study with a language as part of a major/minor programme.