About this course

Become a manager of the future with the commercial awareness, skills and knowledge to successfully lead modern organisations.

Introduction

This course will provide you with a comprehensive understanding of what it means to be a manager in contemporary businesses, including the latest management practices and responsibilities.

During the programme you will gain a thorough understanding of key business functions, such as marketing, finance and strategy, and the critical role they play for business success and growth.

Developed to meet current and future business market demands, after the course you will be equipped with employer's most sought-after skills and ready to make the transition to middle, or senior, management positions.

You also have the option to tailor your learning and choose between three pathways:

- Management MiM: a general pathway that addresses the most universal aspects of managing organisations
- Management MiM – Strategic Organisational Change: a specialist pathway focused on key aspects of business decision-making, such as project management, innovation, implementing strategic change and dealing with crisis
- Management MiM – Responsible Leadership: a specialist pathway focused on key aspects connected to sustainability and fair corporate practices.

The two specialist pathways have been created to cater to the growing demand for specialists in these areas.

So, if you choose the Strategic Organisational Change or Responsible Leadership pathways, this will be reflected in your degree title.

To pass the programme, you need to successfully complete six 20-credit modules and a final 60-credit applied research project or dissertation. The modules you study will vary depending on your chosen pathway.

Please, note the structure of this programme remains subject to approval following exciting developments for our September 2025 students. Course content

Discover what you'll learn, what you'll study, and how you'll be taught and assessed.

Semester one

During the first semester, you will gain critical insights into essential management topics including marketing, operations, strategy and organisational theory.

You will undertake three compulsory 20-credit modules (60 credits in total). These are the same for the three pathways.

COMPULSORY MODULES

- ULMS862 Operational Decision Making and Business Analytics

The success of an organisation's business strategy depends heavily on how well it can deploy its operations (both internal and external) and how well it uses analytics to support those operations. To enable students to contribute towards organisation's success, this module will train them to identify the decisions at an organisation's operational level and coach them to understand the factors that can influence these decisions. Following this, the module will focus on imparting the knowledge and skills to deploy data analytics to make informed decisions for different operations in organisations. The module will enable students to structure different decisions that need to be made at the operations level in an organisation and examine how business analytics drive those decisions to create and sustain competitive advantages. Through activities including case studies and scenario analysis, students will be equipped with the operational insights and data analytics knowledge essential for navigating decision-making in today's data-driven business environment.

- ULMS869 Marketing Management in the Digital Age

The overall aim of this module is to provide students with an understanding of marketing management in the digital age, encompassing both academic principles and practical applications. Academically, students will learn about the foundations of marketing management, current debates within the field, and the impact of digital technologies on marketing theory. Practically, students will learn about traditional and digital marketing management tools such as the extended marketing mix, segmentation, targeting and positioning, content marketing, search engine optimisation, and social media marketing. Students will critically explore how these tools can be applied using case studies that bridge conventional and digital marketing contexts.

- ULMS871 Strategic Management and Organisational Change

This module examines the key concepts and frameworks of strategic management and seeks to understand their implications for organisational change. Drawing on knowledge from industrial organisation economics, organisational management and socio-psychological perspectives, this module discusses multifarious drivers of competitive advantage. In addition, the module investigates strategies that firms adopt to navigate organisational change. Moreover, the module applies theoretical insights of key frameworks to real world challenges through case studies.

Semester two

During the second semester, you will further explore a number of key management topics, with the opportunity to choose the modules adapted to your interests.

Teaching and assessment

How you'll learn

Seminars are interactive and topic focused. You will have the opportunity to expand your knowledge via computer lab activities, case studies, problem solving sessions and group discussions.

In addition, we organise a series of sessions focused on contemporary topics, which include research by faculty, external guest speakers, and presentations from alumni and members of the Management School's advisory board.

Seminars are bookended by live lectures and supported by online learning materials.

How you're assessed

To achieve your MiM qualification, you need to complete 180 credits:

- Semester One: three 20-credit modules (60 credits in total)
- Semester Two: three 20-credit modules (60 credits in total)
- Final project: 60 credits

You must pass all the modules with a minimum grade of 50%. Subject to meeting specific criteria outlined by the University, you will graduate with a Pass, Merit or Distinction.

The programme follows a balanced assessment strategy which combines written individual assignments and reports, group presentations, reflective assessments, quizzes, and a final research project or dissertation.

This variety will allow you to develop confidence across multiple formats, catering to different strengths and providing broad opportunities for academic growth.

The programme also embraces 'authentic assessment' by including practical assignments which will give you the opportunity to apply what you have learned to real-life situations.

This includes group tasks that involve developing evidence-based analysis to real-life leadership scenarios, and reflective portfolios to capture your personal learning and implications for future management practice.

These forms of assessment will require you to present your findings in different formats for various stakeholders. The goal is to help boost your confidence and prepare you to become a well-rounded graduate and future manager.
